"Send a FAX!" says Futuro-Fax-Fusion, a new loose-knit cultural movement dedicated to the facsimile machine, carbon paper and the pencil [adding machines are cool, too] -- technologies allowing FREEDOM from computer addiction.

What once seemed labor-saving wonders, computers (and related technologies) have taken over the consciousness of people worldwide, who have come to believe that every transaction of life needs to be filtered through high-tech. We have created a culture that cannot do anything without a computer. If the trend continues, there won't be humans anymore, only androids with all their stimuli coming from the technology they are constantly plugged into.

The Futuro-Fax-Fusion motto is: "Virtual is not Reality"!

Futuro-Fax-Fusion believes it is critical that people spend more time "computer-free" -- playing an instrument, writing a letter, balancing a checkbook, reading a newspaper, creating art, visiting with friends, going to concerts, walking in the park, planting a garden, developing a hobby, getting some exercise, appreciating the light of day.

So, take a break: The facsimile machine, carbon paper and the pencil give FREEDOM from computer addiction.
